Italy has been practising a White Certificates scheme for four years and this workshop is aimed at putting together representative people among the Italian involved actors (AEEG - the Regulatory Authority for Electricity and Gas, who set up the rules and the guidelines for the scheme, CESI RICERCA - one of the main contributors for the EE evaluation procedures for the eligible projects, GME - the electricity Market Operator, ENEA - the National Energy Agency entrusted of Monitoring and Verification of many of the energy efficiency projects).

All these actors will update the audience with proper details about the gained experiences, the attained results, the faced inconveniences in the technical, legislative and market sectors and the actions taken to overcome them.

The second part will allow non-Italian countries to give up-to-date information about their schemes, which sometimes show many features similar to the Italian one. A discussion session will then take place to conclude the workshop, allowing all the present international audience to point out their specific experiences and to debate the presented information.

This workshop should be considered as a very special opportunity to be informed from the voice of the directly involved parts, not only of the principles of the Italian scheme (maybe they begin being known quite well), but also of the implementation activities and the actual operational problems handled and solved.
